

COVID-19 updates for week of Jan. 31

By MICHAEL RILEY Local Journalism Initiative Reporter On Jan. 31, the number of COVID-19 cases in Ontario since Jan. 15, 2020 was 1,103,294 with 3,043 new cases reported. The total number of deaths from COVID-19 has been 11,444 with 31 fatalities reported on Jan. 31, down from 32 the previous day. In Hastings Prince Edward County, according to Hastings Prince Edward Public Health, as of Jan. 31 there are 100 new high-risk cases, 343 active high-risk cases, 15 outbreaks in high-risk settings like long term care homes and 33 deaths reported. According to the Renfrew County and District Health Unit, of which South Algonquin Township is a part, there were 2,822 confirmed cases as of Jan. 31, with 2,519 resolved cases, 20 deaths and 96 new cases reported. With the Omicron variant's BA.2 sub lineage (BA.1 being the original sub lineage of Omicron) now counted at over 100 cases in Canada since November, and at over 10,000 cases in 47 countries around the world, evidence from the U.K. Health Security Agency suggests that booster shots still provide protection against BA.2. They said that vaccine effectiveness against symptomatic disease was similar for BA.1 and BA.2 sub lineages of Omicron, and that with booster shots, two weeks following said shot, they provided 63 per cent protection against the original Omicron variant and 70 per cent protection against BA.2. For anyone over the age of five years, still needing to get also COVID-19 vaccination shots or boosters, there will be vaccination clinics happening in North Hastings over the next couple of weeks, according to the HPEPH Facebook page.
